Women, Work, And Politics: The Political Economy Of Gender Inequality (The Institution For Social And Policy Studies)

Synopsis

Looking at women's power in the home, in the workplace & in politics from a political economy perspective, Torben Iversen & Frances Rosenbluth demonstrate that equality is tied to demand for women's labour outside the home, which is a function of structural, political & institutional conditions.

As a professor, I assign this book in both my undergraduate political science class on gender inequality and my graduate level class on work/family policy. It offers important insights into the political economy of gender inequality in labor markets, politics, and the family and is written in a straightforward, accessible style. The argument is supported by quantitative analysis that my students can choose to read or not. I recommend it highly for anyone interested in the ways in which gender dynamics are structured by material circumstances. The answers are sometimes surprising but always convincing.

Excellent resources for my essay! An easy read with pertinent facts. Will keep in my library as an added resource.
